FRAGRANT WATERS' MURMUR

That there is one chief subject for discussion this week.

That there are many who think the subject has passed the stage of discussion and who deplore any further waste of words until after a little action.

That there is no room for discussion over the question "should murder be punished?"

That the Kuching affair was the act of the populace as a body, and there is no room for discussion about that.

That punishment should be indicated by the Chinese Government on the Kuching populace as a body.

That it won't.

That it never does, never has done, and never will do.

That fifty years ought to be long enough for a fair test.

That the Chinese Government has been weighed in the balance for fifty years over this anti-foreign outrage question and has been found wanting.

That the longer it is weighed, the more it is found wanting.

That since the Canton massacres in the early forties, China has steadily grown more and more odious to protests.

That the Sinophiles can say what they like—it is usually what other people don't like—but the fact remains that the Chinese character is a hideous, preposterous, and all that is vicious, brutal, cowardly, and murderous, as proved by these popular demonstrations.

That when Canton was devastated by the plague, two ladies of an American Medical Mission worked like heroic angels to save life, and were rewarded by being savagely mobbed and maltreated for their pains.

That the mob of several thousands melted away as usual at the sight of one white man.

That there was no punishment in that case at all.

That at Kuching a baby of thirteen months was hacked and speared.

That a little boy of three was cut up by the populace and left with his brain exposed in several places.

That such things are not to be coldly set down as political necessities.

That they are not to be treated as individual acts but as permanent and almost universal features of the country.

That such features must be wiped out, in the interests of humanity.

That the wiping-out would probably interfere with trade, so we do not do it.

That we thus stand convicted of trading at a terrible cost.

That not even Napoleon in his jester at the nation of shopkeepers would have thought us too cheap to trade in babies' blood.

That if we were to annex Fokien and Kwangtung, in order to rid humanity of such outrageous plagues, we might have some trouble with foreign complications.

That to have trouble with foreign complications, we must be willing to let our sailors and wives and mothers and children die most fearful deaths.

That we prefer to parley, because parleying with the Chinese has always been so easy and profitable.

That Englishmen were not always so.

That the white South Sea Island cannibals do as these Chinese have done and have killed their villages to bits without further ado.

That there is in Canton a tablet erected by a Viceroy saying how the Cantonese valiantly destroy foreigners and "cut them in pieces" (our own tender children are desirous to devour their flesh and to sleep upon their skin).

That Burma was annexed solely on this ground of inhuman practices, if I remember rightly.

That if this Kuching affair had occurred "in days of old, when knights were bold" and Saladin and his Saracen savages committed their atrocities, there would have been no two opinions.

That we did not then stop to consider whether the Government of the East was in a difficult position.

That, since those times, those same Turks have been tolerated for political motives and have taken advantage of the tolerance.

That they have permitted atrocities in Armenia as China does.

That Britain's policy had to give way at last.

That we had every reason to bolster up Turkey against Russia, but could not altogether crush our human feeling and had in the end to side with Russia against Turkey on account of the atrocities in Armenia.

That I am therefore the more pleased to see that Armenia was so well represented at Thursday's meeting.

That it is a curious coincidence that one of the leading families in Hongkong bears a name similar to the name of the village where the worst Armenian atrocities occurred—Satan.

That the meeting was composed of representatives of all nations and creeds, swallowing their differences in the common cause of humanity.

That (as was only natural) the ladies used all the influence they could possibly bring to bear.

That unfortunately the same cannot be said of the men.

That, in fact, so far as the male sex was concerned there was a danger at first that the demonstration would be abandoned.

That that is why Dr. Condie and his colleagues had to throw themselves into the breach and assume the responsibility of calling the community round them.

That a correspondent writes me "Why should the Doctors do this when the official Members of Council are the natural leaders of the community?"

That that is just what our Officials are not.

That my correspondent will probably retort: "Well then, what are they?"

That I don't know, but I know that Hongkong badly needs leaders.

That there is a Branch of the China Assn., a Chamber of Commerce, an Unofficial Club, no better than its Unofficialism if as good and it tried to organize a Representative Association and failed.

That the Hongkong community ought to be ashamed of itself for a weak-kneed, broken-backed, half-hearted, spiritless flock of sheep, with a set of dummy figure-heads as leaders who sit on Director's chairs and never do anything else.

That only the sorts of men like Dr. Condie ever induce the community to assert itself.

That, all the same, what at last the meeting did come off it was a very fine exhibition of public unanimity on the burning question.

That this was a remarkable contrast to the previous day's meeting in the Victoria Recreation Club, in that the one had to do with British heroism in saving life and the other with Chinese heroism in destroying it.

That there are two distinct questions which should be carefully prevented from getting mixed up—first, punishment, and second, prevention.

That the only adequate punishment would be to wipe out the offending populace—wipe out the Kuching district clean off the face of the earth.

SEVEN POUNDS IN ONE WEEK.

Not every man who is this week thank you for finding him. He doesn't want to be fat and for a good reason. A necessary part of a man's life is to be fat, and a man who is fat is a man who is a man.

That the number required is far less than many people think, since the Chinese are so unconsciously puerile.

That, speaking of soldiers, our military contribution settlement at 17½ per cent. involves also an expenditure of $20,000 per annum for ten years for barracks, etc.

That we have little to grumble at, now that we know where we are, and can only hope our garrison will find early employment.

That we know where we are, and can only hope our garrison will find early employment.

That we know where we are, and can only hope our garrison will find early employment.
